Mike strategizes, analyzes, and litigates complex business disputes that have environmental and frequently big-picture policy implications. He is well-versed in the decades-old statutes and regulations that govern rapidly evolving issues, including fracking, superfund remediation, and carbon capture sequestration. Mike's work principally involves disputes arising under environmental statutes including CERCLA, RCRA, the Clean Air Act, and the Clean Water Act. In addition, Mike has represented parties in civil rights, commercial, class action, toxic tort, and regulatory litigation in courts throughout the United States.

Mike's has worked with a wide range of clients. He has represented individuals; municipalities; trade associations; non-governmental organizations; and businesses engaged in industries including manufacturing, power generation and transmission, and the financial and insurance sectors. Over his 20-year legal career, Mike has worked with hundreds of experts in fields ranging from history and economics to environmental engineering and risk assessment. He has resolved claims before any complaint has been filed, clear through managing issues related to the implementation of longstanding consent decrees.

Mike's beginnings in a West Virginia steel town provide him with a unique perspective when litigating headline-grabbing cases involving large industrial sites. He understands the details of each case and distills complicated facts into compelling arguments that carry weight with both courts and the broader communities where his clients live and operate. He also effectively works with individuals and organizations to manage legal and reputational risks associated with their operations

Previous Work

Client Work

- Mike defends parties against “citizen suits” brought by private parties and non-governmental organizations alleging that their activities have violated federal or state law. His successes include securing the dismissal with prejudice – upheld by the Ninth Circuit – of a case alleging that a West Coast utility’s use of hundreds of thousands of telephone poles was illegal, and securing the dismissal of air-related claims at the federal and state level against a Midwestern utility.
- Mike has successfully represented individuals and organizations bringing multiple claims challenging the constitutionality of state laws and has filed amicus briefs related to government policies or conduct in various appellate courts.
- Mike secured a summary judgment win for a natural gas company alleged to have contaminated groundwater through fracking. After expert discovery, the Court dismissed the claims, finding that Plaintiffs had failed to produce any evidence linking their damages to Mike’s client.
- Mike has extensive experience working on Superfund-related matters throughout the United States through both litigation and negotiation. Mike is part of the team representing National Grid at the Gowanus Canal Superfund Site in New York City. National Grid is one of 28 parties that has been directed to investigate, characterize, and address contamination in a complex urban environment. In addition to working on this Site, Mike has assisted clients in resolving intractable disputes at various other high-profile sites through federal and state litigation and mediation.
- Recently, Mike filed litigation to secure access necessary for a client to remediate a site listed on the federal NPL and subsequently secured summary judgment against an $11 million counterclaim based on a never-before-litigated state law provision allowing compensation paid by a remediating party to a current site owner. The court’s decision relied on Mike’s team’s factual and legal analysis in awarding less than 1 percent of the amount claimed in compensation. The court’s decision was affirmed on appeal by the Sixth Circuit.
- Mike has advised public and private water utilities regarding compliance with the federal Lead and Copper Rule.
- Mike has extensive experience in representing parties in toxic tort and property damage litigation, including claims related to asbestos, silica, benzene, VOCs, PCBs, and other chemicals.
- Mike provides legal advice on pending federal legislation and rulemakings and has represented parties in rule challenges and appeals of administrative action before various federal circuit Courts of Appeal. Recently, Mike has represented clients challenging EPA’s startup, shutdown, and malfunction SIP call and multiple clients potentially affected by EPA SO₂ NAAQS designations in both regulatory and judicial proceedings in courts across the country. In addition, Mike has extensive experience advising clients regarding legislation and regulatory changes involving asbestos.

- Mike represents parties involved in building, maintaining, and operating pipeline infrastructure across the United States in federal and state litigation, as well as in discussions with landowners.

Professional Activities

Mike devotes substantial time to pro bono matters, particularly related to civil rights and immigration. Recent engagements include the following:

- Serving as trial and appellate counsel in civil rights case involving voting restrictions passed by the Texas legislature after the 2020 election.
- Filing an amicus brief in the U.S. Supreme Court for a U.S. Senator concerned about Texas and Florida laws limiting content moderation on internet platforms.
- Filing an amicus brief in the Fourth Circuit on behalf of national health and disability rights organizations in support of overturning a lower court finding barring institutional reform litigation related to West Virginia’s foster care system. The Fourth Circuit overturned the district court’s finding below allowing class certification to proceed.

- Securing the First Amendment rights of non-religious persons to perform marriages in Illinois and Michigan through federal challenges to these states' family laws.
- Challenging Michigan's assessment of state sales and use taxes on sales of tampons and other feminine hygiene products, which was removed during the litigation by the Michigan legislature.
- Representing a class of foster children in litigation against the Illinois Department of Children & Family Services.
- Representing a class of foster children against the State of Illinois to secure the ability of same-sex couples to become foster parents.
- Pursuing civil-rights claims on behalf of incarcerated persons related to religious discrimination, unconstitutional conditions of confinement, and in collateral attacks to their original sentences.
- Assisting children and applying for political asylum in the United States
